allied armies in northern France has brought the extreme of their wing within about treme of their wing within about 30 miles of the Heigins frontier.

An official statement issued by the French war office this afternoon says that part of the battle line stretching generally north and south, has been extending morth to a point south of Arras. This line, on which the allies are attempting to envelop the German right wing under Gen. You Kluck, has been pushed gradually ioward the Heigins border as the Germans widened their front in defence, until it extended some 55 miles from the angle that rests on Tracy-Le-Nont.

Terrific fighting continues an the allies' left wing, according to the Paris antement, the most severe struggle being in the region of Hoy, a town 25 miles enast of Amiens nost about midway on this built line. Here the Germans have concentrated strong forces, probably with the purpose of breaking through the front of the allies and isolating their forces to the north.

The Paris sintement adds that the Germans attempted to bridge the Meuse near St. Mikiel, but their pontoous were destroyed. French claims of slight progress in the Worve district are recorded, as are also minor engagements at various points on the front extending east and west.

Thirty-one Transport Ships and 11 War Vessels Assist Big Movement.

Montreal, Que, Oct. 2.—There were troops sail for England; in fact, very few people knew the greatest troop movement overseas in the history of the western continent was under way, according to the following description sent by the correspondent for the Dally

Sent by the correspondent for the Dally Mail:

Thirty-one ships were required to carry the men, the guns, the horses and the supplies of the oversens expeditionary force. To convey that number of ships a fleet of 11 war vessels was requisitioned, the whole movement being the largest and most important ever effected on the Atlantic. It was warried out in a splendid manner. The movement from Valcariler was effected in fine style and the embarkation and salling followed as a part of a well ordered plan. The movement of al, 500 troops and $500 horses was the bliggest war action that Canada has ever undertaken and it was performed almost faultiessly.

The troops that moved in took possession of the wharf and the breakwater and when they disappeared one day the red coats of the 5th regiment replaced the khaki suits of the men of the 12th hattalian. In eight days the divisions moved out of Valcartier. Horses, attillery and transport wascons came over the 18 miles of road, while the troops were sent by train.

"It required five days to transfer the various units, an average of ten troops moving from the camp every day. The trains can directly to the breakwater and the transfer to the ships was made promptly. As the ships were filled they moved off and steamed down the river to anchorages previously agreed on and there met the finval convoy; afterwards the great fleet set out to sea."
